

At Global Poverty Project, we believe we can't eradicate extreme poverty unless we ensure everyone has access to quality education. In the lead up to this replenishment we've been focusing our resources and efforts to ensure the success of today. This includes:

- Launching the replenishment campaign at last year's Global Citizen Festival in front of 60,000 people and 20 million more online.
- 28,361 people signing onto a petition to world leaders.
- Global Citizens sending more than 2200 tweets and thousands of emails about Global Partnership for Education to UK, US and Australian leaders.
- Having more than 100 meetings with political representatives in donor countries.

We are now resolved to mobilizing the full force of Global Citizens to ensure GPE donor and partner governments are held accountable for their commitments to provide quality education to 29 million children through to 2018. We will do this by:

- Utilizing the power of our key events including the Global Citizen Festival – our 60,000-person flagship event with more than 3 billion media impressions – to shine the international spotlight on the global learning crisis.
- Mobilizing 50,000 actions -including emails, phone calls and petitions to key government decision-makers - through our online platform GlobalCitizen.org.
- Routinely producing original online content - as well as generating 25 million print, TV and online media impressions globally - that communicates education results and progress.
- Having at least 50 meetings with GPE donor & partner government representatives to hold them account.
